Research Proves Abstinence Education Protects Children - Also Proves CSE Harms Them!

The Department of Basic Education (DOBE) has extended the deadline for public comments to 30 July for the draft “National Policy on the Prevention & Management of Learner Pregnancies in Schools.” Your voice must be heard on this critical issue at this early stage of policy.

My colleague in the international pro-family movement, Sharon Slater writes, “A recent study by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) goes a long way in settling an important question being bitterly debated in the U.S. and worldwide: abstinence education (AE) or comprehensive sexuality education (CSE)—which approach is best?”

The CDC 2017 Youth Risk Behaviour Survey (YRBS) found that a full 60.5 percent of U.S. high school teens reported they have never had sex! And the trend toward abstinence is going up, not down, with a 1.7 percent increase in the number of teens choosing abstinence since 2015.

Also, there is a rather simple way to resolve the intense debates regarding CSE and AE.

Simply ask the question, what type of sex education has been shown to be most effective in protecting children? Based on the CDC survey findings as well as numerous other studies and plain common sense, it is clear that adolescents should be encouraged to refrain from sexual activity. On this, very few people disagree. (Except the South African government).

Recently, the highly respected Institute for Research and Evaluation (IRE) examined these research findings on school-based CSE programs, applying standards from the field of prevention research.

The results of this review were disastrous for CSE advocates. You can find the full report here and a summary of it here, but this is the overall conclusion:

The last point made in the report is especially important. The data shows that some of these CSE programs actually resulted in an increase in sexual risk behaviors among youth. (You can learn more about how CSE harms children in the documentary, “The War on Children,”

As you can see from Sharon Slater’s excellent research on CSE, it is the most dangerous form of sexual indoctrination of young children in the world and must be stopped at all costs.

The South African government is driving the global sexual rights agenda in Africa because of agreements and trade offs signed at the UN. Most South Africans reject this diabolical agenda.

Please ensure your voice is heard as a parent, grandparent, Pastor or civil society leader. Write to Ms. T Shikwambane at pregnancypolicy@dbe.gov.za by 30 July 2018. Please also pray.
